HAMPSHIRE DOWN

In the 1820's, breeders in the south of England began crossing the Old Wiltshire Horn and the old Berkshire Knot with the South Down. They gradually refined these sheep until in 1889 they were officially registered as the Hampshire Down. The breed then spread through England and around the world, first arriving in Australia in the late 1800's.

Hampshire Downs are known for their large frame, that is very well muscled, with a minimal fat cover which makes the Hampshire Down an ideal carcass, for sections of the Lamb Trade. Hampshire Downs are noted for their high fertility, easy lambing and production of a good quality downs type fleece, which makes them an ideal terminal sire.

Although there are not a large number of Hampshire Down sheep in Australia, the genetics within the breed are strong. Hampshire Downs have shown very good performance in lamb trials, carcass competitions and have also made a good showing from a small number of entries in the National Sire Evaluation Trials.

Lambplan identifies the top performing animals and tests them to improve the Hampshire Down breed even further.

Commercial lamb producers using a Hampshire Down sire can look forward to:-

- a) easy lambing
- b) fast growth rates
- c) well muscled lambs carrying minimal fat
- d) increased returns

Vaccinate for cheesy gland or you're letting yourself and the flock down.

Keep your industry healthy.

Many sheep flocks in Australia have Cheesy Gland. And three separate and independent Department of Agriculture* trials have proved that sheep infected with cheesy gland cut, on average, less wool than healthy sheep.

Beating cheesy gland means better gross margins from wool and more meat to market when you're culling your older sheep. CSL Glanvac protects the flock against cheesy gland, and it's the number one selling vaccine in the world's biggest flock - ours!

And new technology ultrafiltered Glanvac means you now only have to use a 1 mL dose to get the same protection.

So don't let the flock down. Vaccinate with Glanvac now.

Glanvac.

The only Australian made cheesy gland vaccine from an Australian-owned company.
Now with 1 mL dose!
